How to Use Our Booklets As Teaching Tools with Families and Caregivers

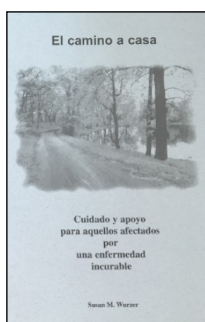

The Road Home provides supportive information to people who are caring for loved ones who are being cared for at home, in the hospital, skilled nursing facility or assisted living centers. Clinicians working in palliative and hospice care programs can use The Road Home as a counseling tool in family meetings, mail to out-of-town family members or include in their program's informational and admission packets. Family members will appreciate this small and easy-to-read booklet that allows them to gain insight privately about the emotional and psychological aspects of caring for a loved one who is dying.

Help Me Understand provides the necessary information to help family, friends and professionals teach children that death is a natural part of life. Anyone trying to find the right words to explain dying and death to children of any age will find the sensitive language and real life examples easy to use and adapt.

Tips for Caregivers highlights pertinent caregiving topics with time-tested and practical information for first-time, long-term and professional caregivers. Use Tips for Caregivers when teaching families to help them sort through and prepare for details while focusing on what is important to their loved one and caring for themselves in the process. Written by caregivers with more than 100 years of collective experience and wisdom.

El camino a casa is the Spanish language companion booklet to The Road Home. Provide those who speak Spanish with a copy of El camino a casa so they can receive the benefit of end of life education and support in their preferred language.
